Here are some of our latest posts:

What makes a great leader?

Over the last couple of weeks Gordon Brown has been in the media in the UK portrayed as a leader struggling to control let alone lead his party and his country, whereas Obama continues to be portrayed as a world leader, a US President who not only leads the US but who can influence and lead other heads of state. What is the difference that is making the difference?

For me some of the main differences between the two (in so far as we see them or they are portrayed in the media) are as follows:... read more

A moral dilemma?

It seems that this is the year for us the public to be let down by organisations and institutions we are meant to trust - first the banks and now our politicians. Is this a moral debate?... read more

Serve your employees first

The UK leisure industry is expecting a bumper year as people stay at home rather than going abroad for their holidays and yet the concern is how do we keep people holidaying in Britain rather than going back to Spain next year when things get better?

One of the key issues in the sector is customer service. There is nothing we can do about the British weather but we can do something about the service provided. In the main, we are awful at customer service.... read more

Vision - is it still in sight?

How many financial institutions and other companies suffering in the current economic climate are too busy mopping up the day to day issues to see whether their organisation's vision is still the same? ... read more

First 100 days

Much has been reported recently on President Obama's First 100 days in office - has he been effective, has he made mistakes he will not bounce back from, what has he done? In the main the response has been positive if look warm compared to the response when he won the election.

This got me thinking about any First 100 days in post - be it in a public service post or a commercial one. What are the key outcomes someone going into a senior position should be looking for and how do they do it?... read more
